To whom it may concern:

I would very much like to take this opportunity to introduce Hilary Borget as a potential candidate for your organization. As a recent graduate of the School of Culinary Arts in Denver, Colorado, you the employer may expect great things.

If it is true that the skills honed in the classroom are transferable to the workplace please know that Hilary will be a tremendous asset in a variety of positions within your company. Hilary shows remarkable skill with her attention to detail, great people skills, excellent problem solving techniques and considerable background in the industry so far. Hilary is also a 'natural born' leader in my opinion and has the respect of both her peers and instructors throughout our school as well.

I stake my reputation on this reference, knowing full well your decision to hire Hilary would be a wise one.

Thank you for any consideration you may give Hilary and once more I want to say in all honesty that I will miss her both in the classroom and as a friend. The ultimate compliment from me would be that I have learned from Hilary and I have.

Sincerely,

Ralph Dobson-C.H.E.
